After independence from Britain in 1957 the Khula and Likha tribes became independent. They were divided between the two states of South Africa by the South African Constitution. The Klaas were in direct violation of the laws of apartheid, while The Likha tribe were also accused of not paying the tax they owed to the state of South Africa, when the Nzandlaan government, under the orders of the British and apartheid South Africa, issued them a notice of default by October 5th 1958, because they had not paid their debt to the British and apartheid South Africa. As a consequence, the Likha tribe have now been given up to two years probation (until January 5th 2013) after which they can be subject to a fine for refusing to pay their taxes to the South African government and will be barred from all the benefits of South African citizenship.. This bill was introduced in the 114th Congress, which met from Jan 6, 2015 to Jan 3, 2017. Legislation not enacted by the end of a Congress is cleared from the books.. How to cite this information.
